

From Marian Ely:

I was Andrew Gallant's Form Tutor and English teacher at The Gilbert School, Colchester. Despite the passage of many years, I remember him vividly as a most intelligent, creative and talented student; he was also a thoroughly likeable and popular young man. He had wit and integrity – even as a teenager! His excellent intellectual abilities were apparent in his early academic results and later in his increasingly wide range of writing and oral skills – both in professional and personal areas.

Andrew has particular passion for all forms of writing – both literary and non-literary texts. I have been privileged to read much of this over the years and can attest to its originality and imaginative flair, as well as its grammatical accuracy and fluency. His prose is colourful and stylish. In my view, Andrew has the talent to become a published writer. His verbal skills are also impressive – in the past he has been a disc jockey for a local hospital radio and also a German nightclub.

As far as employment is concerned, his range of acquired knowledge and skills are extensive. He has experience in many areas, among which are editing, accounting, design and computing in retail gifts, property, automotive sales and clothing.

Andrew is a well-rounded, focused and highly talented individual. His reliability, intelligence and experience will prove an asset to any future employer. I have no hesitation in recommending Andrew to you.
